

CHOOSING THE RIGHT SCULPTURE FOR YOU

Ask yourself . . .

- Do you like it?
- How does it make you feel?

- What does it make you think of?
- What other images or experiences does it call to mind?

When a collector has an emotional reaction to a sculpture, dealers call this "finding yourself in the piece". It is the first and foremost consideration when buying a sculpture.

ASSESSING THE TECHNICAL QUALITIES OF THE SCULPTURE

- Is the piece well-balanced?
- Is the composition pleasing to the eye?
- Are the details well-defined?
- What is it made of?
- How is it finished?

The characteristics of the materials dictate the type of finish that can or should be used. For example, serpentine lends itself well to a highly polished finish, while grey basaltic soapstone is difficult to carve and does not polish well. Carvers generally take the type of stone they are working with into consideration when designing their sculptures.
